

Sample Projects for RJLF Interns

- If you are a creative individual with some graphic design and/or video production experience, consider joining us to assist with the development of our online content and marketing materials. We are always looking for capable, enthusiastic, and talented creative types who can help us generate fun videos for our site, as well as create and design brochures and flyers for our fundraisers.
- If creating and running events is your forte and you know how to get volunteers motivated, help us develop and manage a fundraiser. We have plenty of high school, college, and adult volunteers just waiting on the sidelines who are ready to work.
- If you have a passion for writing, interviewing, and blogging, we would love your assistance with developing interesting content for our marketing and education materials. Spend your time with us meeting and interviewing our Fellows and writing up pieces for our blog and/or local articles, or develop a newsletter and see your work go out to over a 1,000 people.
- If public relations (PR) and social media are your passion, we can give you access to seasoned PR professionals with whom you can collaborate to catapult RJLF's PR and social media efforts. We rely on the creative minds of our PR and social media interns to help us spread the word about our great cause.
- If administrative work is your area of interest (e.g., research, database management, bookkeeping), there is always something for you to do at RJLF.

Whatever project you are assigned, be assured that you will have a mentor to guide you throughout the internship. We have high expectations, but we are also committed to helping you reach them. If you put in the effort and have the enthusiasm that we need, we will write you a glowing letter of recommendation and give you suggestions on how to leverage your RJLF internship when you start searching for a full-time job or filling out your college applications.
