

With ten years in the NYC marketing agency world behind her, Jo Leonard is now in her 18th year of practice as a professional college and career coach, based in Bucks County, with clients all around the world.

“I followed the advice of mentors, family members and my own instinct and have had a fantastic career as a result. Now I find myself in the fantastic position of being able to help others find their own purpose and path. I understand the experience of being a confused young adult and consider myself very lucky to have built a career around my passion, guiding and teaching, and building their confidence to make important decisions.”

Jo has been asked to train and coach Fulbright Scholars, Ted speakers, university business students, high school student leaders and professionals in transition. She speaks on the power of personal branding, the pitfalls and value of social media, advanced job search skills, and many other topics relevant to 20-somethings as they try to launch.